BRITAIN HEADING FOR RUIN

The coal strike

A DEFEAT FOR SCARGILL A DEFEAT FOR THATCHER A DEFEAT FOR BRITAIN

NO ONE was victorious in the miners' year-long dispute, just ended. The whole thing was a tragedy, for the miners and for the nation. Just because Arthur Scargill and his Marxist gang in charge of the NUM finally had to admit defeat, it does not mean that there is any cause for smug self-congratulation on the part of Mrs. Thatcher and her Government. The strike could have been avoided by wise and strong national leadership, but this was lacking. The affair was a national fiasco and disgrace with discredit to almost everyone concerned.

internal as well as external, look gloatingly on at us in our folly.

It is not the time or place here to go into the rights and wrongs of the dispute itself. The question of the pit closures is a highly complex one which can only be properly judged by taking each individual closure case and looking at it on its own merits. Scargill's position that no pits should be closed was obviously an absurd and untenable one, but the closure scheme as produced by the Coal Board, acting on behalf of the Government had little to commend it either; it was a scheme devised

SCARGILL: THE SIGN TELLS ITS OWN STORY

The cost to Britain has been calamitous, reaching a total of £3½ billion when all things are taken into account. And that merely represents the financial cost. Whole communities of people have been divided, sometimes with father against son and brother against brother. The bitter legacy of this will remain for years, possibly for the remainder of the lifetimes of those involved. Britain has been set against Britain in vicious strife while the enemies of Britain, in the minds of accountants and with little consideration for the lives of the communities affected. Its merit was further reduced by the fact that it was put forward against the background of a totally failed national economic policy which had created massive and widespread unemployment and offered little alternative job prospects to the miners marked down for redundancy.

THE SCARGILL GANG

The miners' cause deserved better leadership than it got. Arthur Scargill is nothing more than a self-serving and self-seeking egotist, who simply used the grievances of his own union members in pursuit of an ambitious plan for his own political advancement that went badly wrong. His leading associates are little better. They all have the look of mean, grasping little men who live in a world of political conflict and confront-

THATCHER: NO VICTORY

WHILE BRITAIN'S UNEMPLOYED 3½ million nearer, Government supporters, desperately frightened at the prospect of a big loss in its popularity, are trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the British people by talking about a prospective economic 'boom'. In this propaganda they are well backed up by the Tory Press.

"Britain's on the brink of a boom," screamed the headlines in the Daily Express on February 25th. But what is the substance behind this claim? Only that, according to the CBI (a firmly pro-Tory, pro-Government interest group) there has been a rise in the volume of exports accompanying a fall in the international value of the Pound, and that the productivity of industry has been going up in terms of output per worker.

FALSE PICTURE

But a moment's consideration will reveal this as nothing more than Government propaganda. Of course if you lower the value of your currency on international markets your exports are going to cost less to the buyer. Also less — although Government spokesmen prefer not to mention this — will be the profit you make in selling your exports. What is the point in sending more goods abroad if we get paid less for them in terms of our own money?

As for the rise in productivity, said by Government apologists to be about to become greater than that of any of the other EEC nations, that again is just playing with figures. A nation whose starting rate of productivity is extremely low is obviously going to be able to register a larger percentage

Only through Nationalism will come salvation and recovery increase than its rivals whose productivity has been high. Also it is entirely misleading, when a nation has nearly 3½ million unemployed, to measure its rate of productivity increase on the basis of output among workers who are employed. If a nation's overall output goes down by 10 per cent in a given period of time but its level of employment in that same period goes down by an even larger percentage, then of course it is a matter of simple mathematics that the Government will be able to claim a higher rate of productivity on average per employed worker!

The fact is that only by a massive increase in total national productivity (not just average productivity per employed worker) can Britain recover. And the first requirement of that increase is that we put our huge army of unemployed back to work instead of having them sit around idle at the nation's expense. The Government has failed, and is failing, to do this.

As for export figures, these never have provided, and cannot provide, any accurate barometer of national economic growth or recession. The only possible barometer are the figures for total trade, i.e. for sales to the home market as well as for exports. The fact is that British industry has been losing out disastrously in the home market as a result of the rising flood of imports, and that in consequence of this our total trade is still on the decline.

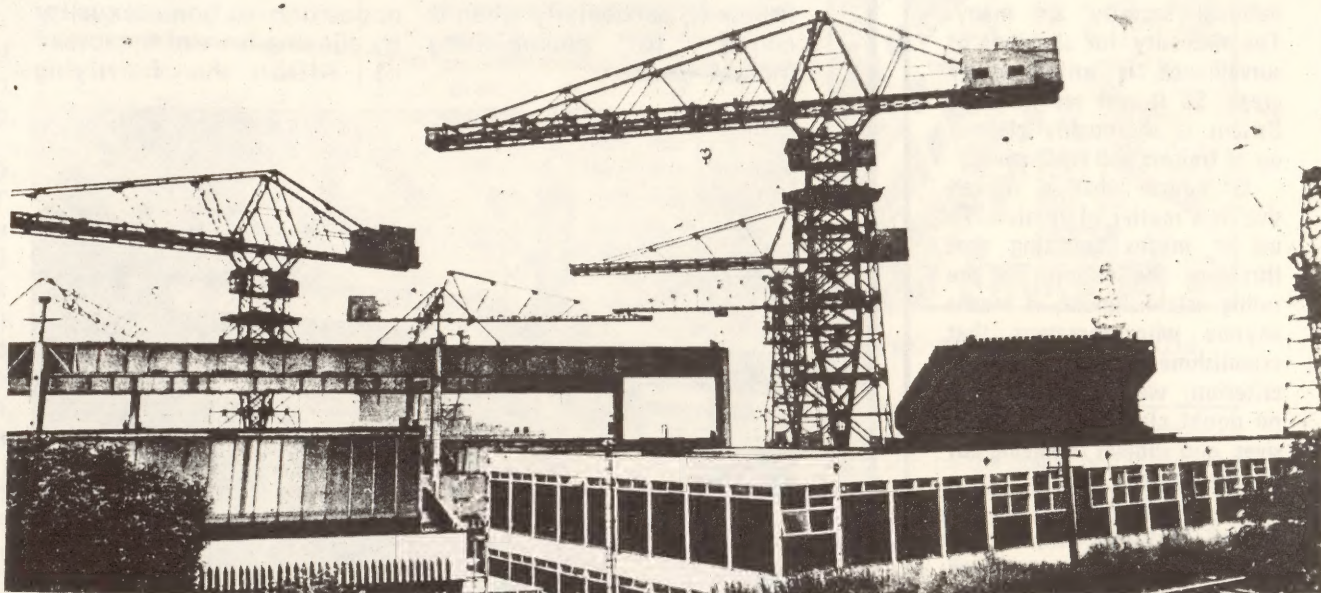

All this is of course cunningly concealed in the selective figures game played by the supporters of the Government.

THE NATIONALIST SOLUTION

We Nationalists have said again and again that there is only one way in which this can be done: not by running around the world pleading with other nations for them to buy our goods; not by depressing the value of our currency so that we will sell more goods for the same (or less) profit; but by closing the doors of our home market to manufactured imports and reorganising our work force to produce primarily for this market.

Not only will the present Tory Government not adopt this policy but it is rejected by all the other major parties too: Labour, Liberal and SDP. They reject it because it is a Nationalist policy and they are Internationalists.

Only through Nationalism will come salvation and recovery. This applies to our economic problems just as it does to all our other problems. Let us learn this lesson before it is too late!

PHONE-TAPPING

WHAT AN ALMIGHTY FUSS some people have been making over the phone-tapping issue!

Why are the police authorised to instal listening-in devices in some folks' telephones? Very simply, in the interests of crime prevention and detection and of national security. Whether we like it or not, phone-tapping is an entirely necessary exercise.

The supporters of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament have been among those who have had listening devices installed in their phones, and this has led some people to protest. Surely, they claim, CND is not a subversive organisation?

We would disagree. We think CND to be thoroughly subversive and certainly a threat to Britain's national security, in as much as its avowed purpose is to undermine our nation's capacity for self-defence.

Those opposed to phone-tapping have also cited examples of people whom they claim are absolutely respectable citizens with no record either of breaking the law or of any political militancy or extremism but whose phones have nevertheless been subject to police surveillance.

To this we would simply reply that exactly the same thing could once have been said of Guy Burgess, Donald McLean and Anthony Blunt. If their phones were not tapped in those days, more's the pity.

The anti-phone tapping brigade for the most part acknowledge that there are certain categories of people whose phones need to be tapped but say that they should be kept to the absolute minimum and that the scale of phone tapping in Britain today needs to be drastically reduced.

Again we would disagree. We think that there are an awful lot of people whose phones are presently not tapped but certainly should be.

A stable national situation in which treason and subversion are kept down to a very tiny level, in which the internal threat to national security is very small and in which therefore very little phone-tapping or other similar forms of surveillance — that is a most agreeable situation which we would all very much like to see.

Unhappily, it is not the situation that prevails at the present time. Treason and subversion are rife; those engaged in activities that threaten national security are many. The necessity for all kinds of surveillance is unfortunately great. So it will remain until Britain is thoroughly cleaned up of traitors and subversives.

Of course what is 'subversive' is a matter of opinion. To us, it means anything that threatens the nation. To the ruling establishment, it means anyone who threatens that establishment. By this latter criterion, we Nationalists are no doubt classified as 'subversives' and subject to having our phones tapped.

Do we complain? Do we whine? Certainly not; we just make sure that when we speak to anyone on the telephone we say nothing that we do not want the establishment to hear!

10 MORE VICTIMS OF APPEASEMENT

Latest Ulster tragedy one more product of half-baked Government approach to Irish Republicanism

THE BOMBING by home-made mortars of the RUC headquarters at Newry has rightly been described as one of the worst atrocities in the long history of terror and atrocity in Northern Ireland. Nine of the best police officers in the division lost their lives. Then a further Ulster policeman met his end when Sergeant Hugh McCormac, in fact a Roman Catholic, was gunned down as he arrived at Mass near his home town of Enniskillen.

Of course we have had the usual crocodile tears and angry condemnation by Government spokesmen, but, as in the past, the Government has the blood of these murdered people on its hands.

Its policy in Northern Ireland, like

Republican minority to join a united Ireland — compromises which obviously are impossible because the two sets of aspirations cannot in all common sense be reconciled.

In pursuit of this policy of appeasement and compromise, successive governments have shown themselves prepared to sit down at the table and and so on ad nauseam. All these formulae have been based on one basic central illusion: that it is possible to satisfy the Loyalist lobby and the Republican lobby at the same time, while quite clearly it is not possible.

In the meantime, also to avoid upsetting Republicans, the security forces in the province have had their is subversion and will be crushed. The time has come to give the security forces full powers to deal with that subversion, unfettered by considerations of kid gloves. The time has come to give Republican terrorists, when they are caught, not the comfort of an easy going prison life but six feet of rope.

that of its predecessors since the present phase of the conflict began in 1968, has been one not of victory but of appeasement, not to support the Loyalist community and affirm British rule but to strike compromises between the aspirations of the Loyalist majority to remain British and those of the parly and bargain with representatives of the Republican cause, both in Ulster and the Republic itself, including the Irish Government. One after another pretty 'formula' has been produced to try and placate Republican demands: the abolition of Stormont, the Council of Ireland, the Northern Irish Assembly, teeth drawn in a multitude of ways, never being allowed to operate with the full weaponry, tactics and singleness of purpose necessary to defeat the terrorists.

I.R.A. ENCOURAGED

What has all this achieved? Very simply, it has sustained the IRA and other Republican terrorist groups like INLA in the belief that Britain does not really have the will to rule in Northern Ireland, that it wants to withdraw at the earliest convenient opportunity and that it is prepared in this regard to ditch its own loyal subjects.

It is that belief that gives the terrorists the will to carry on. They believe that in the final test of resolve the resolve of British Government will crack first. In the behaviour of one British Government after another in the last two decades there is much good reason for this belief.

The time has come to recognise that the policy of appeasement, of compromise and of bi-partisanship has been a failure. The time has come for Westminster to declare that it is not 'impartial' in the Northern Irish conflict, it is on the side of the Loyalists who are on the side of Britain. The time has come to declare, not just that Northern Ireland will remain British as long as the majority wish it but that it will remain British period. The time has come to declare that Republicanism in Northern Ireland in any shape or form

Only when such a policy is adopted will the likes of the police officers killed at Newry and the one cut dead near Enniskillen be able to go about their lives in reasonable safety. For the IRA and its allies will be the less likely to murder them when they see no purpose in it.

AIDS? Don't worry, says Charles

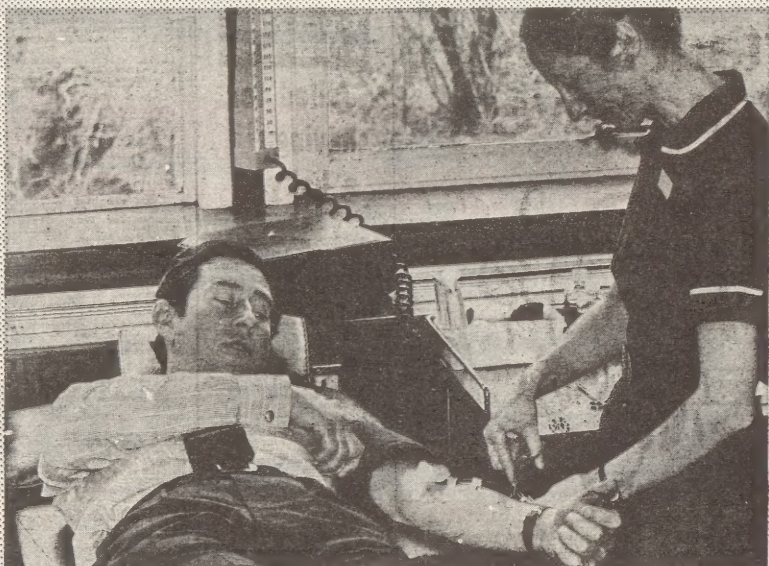

PRINCE CHARLES likes to make himself popular by performing services for the establishment, particularly when it comes to championing 'liberal' causes.

In his latest effort in this regard he has been trying to combat the mounting wave of opposition to homosexuality by allaying fears of the spread of AIDS, the horrifying disease transmitted by queers. Recently he was seen ostentatiously getting himself photographed in the role of blood donor, giving his pint at the North London Transfusion Centre. He announced that he was donating his blood to show that there was no fear that by doing so the donor would contract AIDS.

Just who does Prince Charles think he is kidding? The big fear about AIDS is not that it will infect blood DONORS — for that is an impossibility — but that it is liable to contaminate the people RECEIVING blood donations. His Royal Highness' exhibition has done nothing to arrest that fear.

The whole thing looks just like a cheap publicity stunt, engaged in by Charlie at no risk to himself whatever.

YOUR LETTERS

Sir,—Have you heard of the latest prison, just opened near Watton, Norfolk and known as the Wayland Prison? The prison boasts a lavishly equipped sports hall, a fitness gym, all-weather tennis and soccer pitches, landscaped gardens, a baby-sitting service for visiting relatives, a carpeted pre-release area and a hospital which, according to one visiting local councillor, is up to BUPA standards.

Can we really be surprised that fewer and fewer people mind going to jail these days?
T. R. SEDGEWICK

Sir,—Our 'liberal' judges and magistrates are one reason why we have such an appalling crime rate. In one recent case in which a brutal child sex attacker came up the judge, after hearing his story in which he claimed he had been sexually abused by his father when a child himself, said, "You are not the oge you are made out to be. You are more sinned against than sinner." The attacker was given just a year in jail, despite a long record of similar offences in the past. Police in the court had to restrain the father of the attacked child, when the summary and verdict were delivered, from getting at the defendant.

Me? I think they would have had to restrain me from getting at the judge!
A. WALKER-WRIGHT

Sir,—The latest piece of poison put out by TV is the series The last place on earth, which attempts to defame the character of Captain Scott of the Antarctic.

It is generally accepted that Scott's expedition to the South Pole was not as efficiently organised as that of his adversary, Amundsen, who eventually beat him to his target. He nevertheless was known to all those acquainted with him as a man of great character and courage, of whom Britain can be proud. How typical of television to try to blacken his name!

ation that has long become out of date. They are wholly typical products of the old system, as in their different way are Prime Minister Thatcher and her Tory Government cohorts. It is a system governed by the class war mentality, which is equally obnoxious and nationally self-destructing from whichever side of the class barriers it manifests itself.

Under leaders different to Scargill and his gang, abandoning some of that gang's more ridiculous demands and rejecting the vicious bully-boy tactics of the red mobs on the picket lines, the miners' case might have won much more sympathy from the nation. On the other hand, under better leadership at Government level a scheme for modernising and streamlining the coal industry could have been produced which was more acceptable to the mass of miners, while also avoiding the year-long stoppage that took place.

FRUITS OF WEAKNESS

Tory Government ministers from Mrs. Thatcher downwards have prattled on endlessly about the desirability of a national secret ballot among the miners to resolve whether to go ahead with the strike or return to work, and they have taunted Scargill with the accusation that he has been afraid to call such a ballot. But in fact the absence of any ballot is just as much the fault of the Government as of Scargill & Co. Had the Government had the necessary courage and strength of character, it would long ago — in fact shortly after its assumption of power in 1979 — have brought forward legislation to make the secret ballot on such matters mandatory throughout industry. Instead a wishy-washy compromise scheme was introduced which merely 'encouraged' unions to work towards this formula by means of various sugar-coated inducements. In effect it was left to union bosses, as in the past, to make their own decisions as to whether they would consult their members when to start or end strikes. All the petty intimidation and gangsterism of the trade union mafia was left intact by reason of Government cowardice and weakness.

VINDICATION OF B.N.P. POLICIES

We might summarise by saying that the outcome of the strike has underlined 100 times over the correctness of British Nationalist policy as expounded in the BNP Manifesto for the General Election of 1983. The organisation of British industry must be directed to the purpose of maximum national self-sufficiency, utilising vital energy assets like coal and oil to their ultimate limit. Redundancies where they are necessary must be met by the immediate provision of alternative work in the form of other industries protected from foreign competition in the home market. Finally, our whole procedure of industrial relations must be overhauled, creating but one body and one interest to negotiate and arbitrate for the whole of industry and leaving no place for dinosaurs like Scargill, McGeahy and Heathfield in our midst.

MORE HORRRRIFIC BLACK CRIMES

A YOUNG WOMAN from the country in Ireland, who had come to live and work in London, was invited to visit a night club in Notting Hill for an evening out. She knew that the club was wholly patronised by Blacks but she was not 'racially prejudiced', so she decided to go along.

The minute she entered the club she was grabbed and pushed into a corner, then, as people stood and watched she was dragged screaming and kicking into the street, bundled into a mini-cab and taken to a flat. There began a 16-hour terror for the woman in which she was raped, beaten and forced to indulge in a variety of humiliating and degrading acts. Her tormentors were both black and they were eventually caught and charged. One of them, Dennis Nichol, was convicted of rape and the other, Liston Parkinson, of aiding and abetting rape and of indecent assault. Both were jailed at the Old Bailey for 10 years each.

Judge Francis Petre in summarising said that it was "a perfectly dreadful case." The jury heard that the woman accepted an invitation to the club in All Saints Road, Notting Hill. After she was dragged into the mini-cab the driver ignored her screams that she was being kidnapped. After a night of terror she was taken outside the flat and let go.

Parkinson, who admitted a preference for white women, told police when questioned: "She was a white chick in a black man's club. She was there to get us into trouble."

while the burglar made his getaway with a pocketful of jewellery.

The attack took place at mid-day, when the mother and her son returned home and surprised the robber, who had the family's TV, hi-fi and video lined up to take away as well as the jewels. As the young mother was utterly defenceless and unable to stop the black raider, there was absolutely no need for him to hit her, as her husband later commented. The punch was just sheer viciousness for its own sake.

A TEENAGE GIRL was robbed and savagely beaten up after being snatched by two men from a laundrette in Reading. The girl, aged 18, was driven to a sports stadium where her attackers took £20 from her purse and left her with a broken leg and shoulder and other injuries.

The girl was forced out of the laundrette and bundled into a car with tinted windows.

Police described her attackers as one half-caste, 5ft 4in, and well built, with dark, curly hair, and one West Indian of 6ft tall.

BLACKS AND SLUMS

GLC propaganda and America's experience

KEN LIVINGSTONE'S Greater London Soviet has got itself into a fresh row by using public money to promote a big poster campaign aimed at winning further support among London's Blacks by depicting them as the victims of white 'racism'. Some council staff have objected to the posters, saying that if they depicted the respective races with the roles reversed and Whites shown as the oppressed party they would become the subject of prosecutions under the Race Relations Act.

One poster shows a Black trapped in a burning room and Whites ignoring his plight by covering their eyes or mouths with their hands.

Another poster shows Blacks and Whites going into a town hall to apply for housing accommodation, with the two races then coming out separately with the Whites heading for pleasant houses with gardens and the Blacks going to slum tenements. The caption on the poster says: "Black people do not cause slums, they are forced to live in them."

WHAT HAPPENED TO A NICE TOWN

This theory is an interesting one and deserves closer examination. In America, where there has been a large black presence much longer than in Britain, there is a wealth of evidence and experience on the matter which we would do well to study. One case is that of Benton Harbour, a medium-sized town in Michigan.

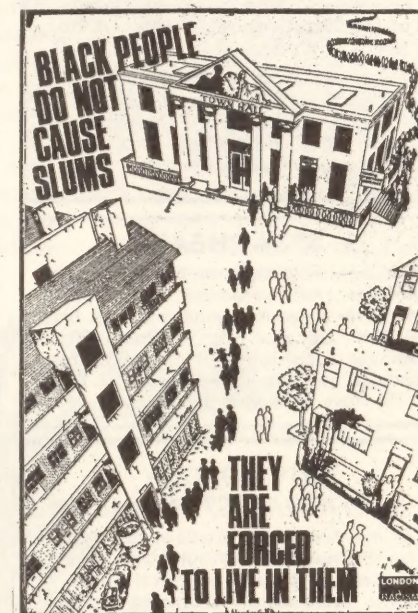

Not long ago Benton Harbour was a clean, prosperous, safe and pleasant town to live in. The population was 90 per cent white and 10 per cent black. It was a growing resort with a booming shipping and manufacturing industry. The housing in the area was of a high standard.

Over the past 20 years, however, Blacks have moved in at an alarming rate and Whites have moved out. Now the population proportions are reversed, with Whites the 10 per cent minority.

The town has become a filthy slum. In the business and retail centre can be found block after block of dilapidated and boarded up shop fronts. 60 per cent of the population is on welfare and 35 per cent is unemployed. Elected black council officials have been indicted for stealing municipal funds. The town is bankrupt, owing 3 million dollars in debts which cannot possibly be repaid. It has been described by a former business manager there as "the worst town in America." Housing areas are slum-ridden.

The Blacks who moved into Benton Harbour in the earlier period were not "condemned to live" in slums. They came to a tidy, well ordered and prosperous town, with good housing conditions in which they were able to share. It was they who turned the housing areas, and indeed the whole town, into one huge slum. Elsewhere all over America the same process has occurred.

PRO-BLACK PROPAGANDA
GLC housing poster

Now we see it happening in Britain too, but on-the-make politicians like Ken Livingstone will not recognise this; instead they try to put across on the British people the abominable lie that the slums the Blacks live in are all our fault.

And don't forget, the Greater London Soviet (as we like to call it) was elected by the people of London by the democratic process!

'RACE HARRASSMENT' CLAIMS: NO NEED FOR PROOF

SOUTHWARK COUNCIL in South London seems to be trying to outbid all others in bending over backwards to win favour with coloured immigrants. The latest rule it has introduced is that any complaints made by immigrants of 'racial harrassment' by their neighbours on council estates are automatically accepted as valid, without any investigations of the evidence or lack of it. Upon receipt of such a complaint, the immigrant family is moved to new accommodation and at the same time given a special 'disturbance allowance' by the Council. As for the Whites accused of the 'harrassment', they are judged guilty until proved innocent, and may lose their homes!

Cornish activists make impact in schools

ACTIVISTS of the British National Party in Cornwall led by area Organiser David Cullingford have recently been engaged in an intensive campaign to bring the party's message to young people in schools in the county. The campaign has aroused great interest among school students and provoked a quite hysterical reaction on the part of establishment- and left-wing-inclined teachers.

After one session of leafletting outside the gates of Liskeard Comprehensive School by a BNP team the Headmaster of the School, Mr. Anthony Wood, was so alarmed at the extent of the favourable reaction among some of his students that he gave the students a lecture in which he urged them not to touch such awful literature. His lecture was greeted with a number of ribald comments from those assembled, questioning his right to tell students what to think and demanding a fair hearing for the BNP.

Mr. Wood then brought the matter to the local press, and started an exchange of letters on the matter of free speech, out of which the BNP won much publicity. He was challenged by local BNP member Richard Trehane in one published letter to allow his school to be addressed by a BNP speaker, as he had speakers from other parties, so that the students could make up their own minds. His reply was pitiful. In it he admitted that he had indeed permitted other views to be expressed in the school by party speakers but he would not allow a platform to the BNP because its policies were "socially destructive". He was then challenged again in a letter from Mr. Cullingford, to which he replied accusing the BNP of being "Nazis" and labelled its attempt to recruit school students as "an unacceptable abuse of the political freedom we enjoy in this country." In other words, "I approve of freedom for some but not for others!"

The BNP thereupon took him up on his allegations of "Nazism", saying in a leaflet that, as the Nazis were accused of burning the books, Mr. Wood's suppression of views he did not like would seem to be symptomatic of Nazi tendencies in the past. This provoked him into such a rage that he issued a public statement to the press that he was threatening to sue the BNP for defamation of character. Said Mr. Cullingford in a published reply: "If Mr. Wood holds the principles of democracy so close to his heart, then he should allow everybody with a political opinion to discuss it with his students. It is not that he objects to politics being talked in his school; he just objects to our politics."

Cornwall BNP, like Bromley BNP recently, have shown what good mileage can be made out of activities which provoke local publicity-seeking leftists and 'liberals' to expose themselves as hypocrites by practising the very things of which they accuse Nationalists. Well done, Cornwall!

ACHIEVING THE BALANCE OF POLITICAL VIEWS

From the Head, Liskeard School:

IN response to Mr. Trehane's letter (The Cornish Times, January 25), we do try to achieve a balance of political views in our political education at Sixth Form. We have had both Robert Hicks and a Labour MP, Guy Barnett to talk to the Sixth Form this year and hope to have a local Liberal before long.

I will not give time to the British National Party as its policies are socially destructive.

In justification of this view I would draw attention to the printed pamphlet they were distributing outside the school on January 7.

In that pamphlet there was an explicitly anti-semitic cartoon and two "jokes" against black Londoners. There was also a quotation from Adolph Hitler approving of the nationalist struggle.

I do not intend to encourage the propagation of such distorted and unwholesome views.
